

Description

The Parish of Kilranelagh in the Diocess of Leighlin and County of Wicklow, is bounded on the North by the Parish of Donoughmore in the Archdiocess of Dublin. On the East by the Parish of Kiltagan. On the South by the County of Carlow. Parishes of Wiltigan & Rathvilly, and to the West by Baltinglass Parish. It contains by the Census taken in the year 1821. Three Hundred and seven Houses. Two thousand and ten Inhabitants; and by the latest accurate extent Contains Two thousand seven hundred and thirty seven Acres, one Rood & twenty Nine Poles. Irish plantation Measure.

The only Relic connected with Irish Antiquities now Observable in said Parish is a square Fort and large Trench, which must have been formerly of consequence, as it gave the Name of Talbotstown to the Western Baronie of the County extending upwards of Twenty Miles to the Bounds of the County of Dublin near Fallowhill.

This Fort is said to have been taken by Cromwell's Army, and the rising Ground is shown where their Cannon were placed for the attack. It is also stated that the Garrison was at that time commanded by a man named Whigham.

Rec^d: 8th June 1826

RB

Classification of Land

for the

TITHE

in the Parish of

Kilranelagh

IN THE

Diocess of Leighlin

and County of

Wicklow

According to its value; into twelve divisions as by the following

SCALE

1825